M.Sc. Pharmaceutics

philosophy and vision of speciality and academic lifetime.

As specialists in drug design and quality control, my view focused on improving the quality of the medicines and decreasing their misuse in different level starting from the drug itself and their dosage form, in addition to all the legal requirement for the right use of medication by the right patient and controlling the market of medicines in Kurdistan region of Iraq. The future for drug industry will based on finding new drug delivery devices and technology for presents drugs in order to improve drug efficacy, safety and decreasing incidence of side effects to improve the quality of life of patients. The national security will not be completed until the food and drug sector are regulated and controlled in the right way by the government in a continuous long-lasting process. Continuous studying the drawbacks of the previous experience in food and drug marketing and collecting the right data about all the defects will help in drawing a right dug policy design for the future.

The goal in teaching is based mainly on establishing the patient care and knowledge about all dosage forms and how the drug administered properly and teaching student all how to deal ethically with patients. Beyond striving to ensure that students learn the fundamental content of the courses I teach, my objectives as a university teacher are as follows: (a) to foster critical thinking skills; (b) to facilitate the acquisition of lifelong learning skills; (c) to help students develop evidence-based clinical problem-solving strategies; and (d) to prepare students to function as highly skilled and competent speech-language clinicians across the scope of practice and in my primary teaching area of augmentative and alternative communication (AAC) in particular. Furthermore, my overall teaching philosophy is based on two principles, which are supported extensively in the literature: (a) active student learning strongly influences student-learning outcomes; and (b) assessment procedures strongly influence student acquisition of knowledge.
